In the United States, the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency method 5320 is currently used for the determination of total organic carbon (TOC) and dissolved organic carbon (DOC) in drinking water. This report presents methodology for analysis of TOC and DOC in water, and the results of an interlaboratory comparison study of the 5320 method conducted by the National Water Quality Assessment Program (NAWAQP). The comparisons were conducted in the research laboratories of four U.S. Environmental Protection Agency National Health and Environment Tracking Program (NHETP) laboratories. The laboratories were selected on the basis of their ability to generate and interpret TOC and DOC data. Overall, measurements of TOC and DOC were in good agreement among the participating laboratories. The average percent difference between measured and reference values for TOC and DOC in four natural water types was -0.2% (w/w) (3.3% uncertainty) and 3.1% (w/w) (5.3% uncertainty), respectively. Measured DOC concentrations were 19-34% (w/w) of the TOC concentrations, which is similar to concentrations reported elsewhere. Differences in DOC concentrations among different laboratories could be attributed to differences in DOC determination techniques, including differences in DOC extraction efficiency and column-scale blank corrections. The percent recovery of the reference TOC (NIST 1646d) varied among laboratories, with an average of 93% (w/w) (6.2% uncertainty). Recoveries of laboratory standards (with and without 5% NaCl blank) generally were between 89% and 105% (w/w) (9.1% uncertainty). Recoveries of laboratory standards with blank corrections varied between 94% and 113% (w/w) (5.3% uncertainty), and laboratory standards without blank corrections varied between 87% and 107% (w/w) (10

However, I need to make the USB bootable on Ubuntu 19.10 desktop machine. The problem is I have a AMD Radeon HD 6400M graphics card which the computers system requirements say are not supported. I have tried disabling the GPU in BIOS but it doesn't seem to be helping (if it is possible). If that is not the problem, or not applicable, then what else is the problem? A: No, it's not possible. The root partition can only use one video card per system. The only way to do what you want with your amd video card is to disable the entire radeon module (by removing it from /etc/modules in the live media) so that you can use the onboard gpu. Note that it is a bit risky, because your are not using a "supported" video-card (you'll need to do a clean install and then reinstall the driver).
