Several current chemotherapeutic agents which are used to treat cancer patients are non-specific. They kill all fast dividing cells in the body. A number of side effects are associated with the use of these non-specific agents, including severe hematological toxicity.

Consequently, there is a great need for more specific anticancer chemotherapeutic agents. One promising type of anticancer chemotherapeutic agent comprises the bisdioxopiperazines (BPI). The BPI derivatives are highly selective in their cytotoxicity and are effective in vivo against a variety of murine and human tumors. For example, BPI-6 has been shown to be an effective anticancer agent when used in single-agent or combined-therapy treatment against murine L1210 leukemia, B9F1 mammary adenocarcinoma, C6 glioma, and solid M5076 reticulum cell sarcoma, and against human

A-431 epidermoid carcinoma, breast carcinoma MCF7 and MX-1 breast carcinoma, and colon carcinoma HCT15. BPI-6 has been also shown to be effective in combination with adriamycin or cisplatin against murine L1210 leukemia (Hofland and Darby, Cancer Res. (1984) 44:7075-9) and human ovarian tumor cell lines (Watkins et al., Cancer Res. (1985) 45:7175-81). BPI-6 has also been shown to be effective as a single agent against three human ovarian carcinoma cell lines (Martin et al., Cancer Res. (1986) 46:400-4) and a human breast carcinoma cell line (Martin et al., Int. J. Cancer (1987) 40:149-54). The mechanism by which BPI-6 exerts its antitumor effect has not been fully elucidated. It is suggested that BPI-6 exerts Connector.Q: Setting the entire window to be the same colour I have some program that I use frequently, that involves a lot of clicking to define the various colours of various elements, but I find that it is cumbersome, as I often click incorrectly and end up with an undesirable colour, so I was wondering if there was a way to set the entire window to a colour, so that I don't have to specify each individual element and instead just specify the window in some way so that all the colours are the same? A: Do you have Visual Studio? If so, You could set all windows to the same theme and never have to specify color again. #endif /* Define to 1 if you have the `clock_gettime' function.
