Orlando City SC's 2019 offseason objectives are clear: Win the MLS Cup. And although the Lions have a shot at winning the Supporters' Shield for the best record in the league, they could also use some rest and contemplation this offseason, especially as they look to rebound from a disappointing finish. To that end, the Lions announced that they have signed three domestic players in midfielder Cristian Higuita, defender Júnior Restrepo and goalkeeper Miguel Gallardo, and also announced the departure of two more, midfielder Danny Deakin and forward Harrison Heath. Here are the five top offseason questions facing Orlando City SC heading into the 2019 offseason:

1. Can the Lions bounce back? Orlando City has had a roller coaster ride during its six seasons in Major League Soccer, currently sitting in fourth place in the Eastern Conference. But the Lions have been inconsistent and have seen a few top players exit the club over

Prognostic significance of the lymphocyte-to-neutrophil ratio in small cell lung cancer: a meta-analysis. The prognostic value of the ratio of lymphocytes to neutrophils (LNR) in patients with small cell lung cancer (SCLC) is controversial. This meta-analysis aimed to clarify this. Articles were identified through searches of PubMed, Embase, the Cochrane Library and the Cochrane Central Register of Controlled Trials. Studies evaluating the correlation of LNR with overall survival (OS) or progression-free survival (PFS) in patients with SCLC were included. The results of eligible studies were pooled by random effects model with the software Stata version 12.0. Nine studies involving 1186 patients were identified. LNR was significantly correlated with OS (HR=0.78, 95% CI 0.67-0.91, p=0.001) and PFS (HR=0.73, 95% CI 0.59-0.90, p=0.003). LNR was not associated with patient's sex (p=0.308), histology (p=0.180), disease stage (p=0.754) and treatment (p=0.806). LNR can be used as a prognostic marker for SCLC patients.

Neutrophil-mediated inflammation, oncolysis and immunosurveillance: cellular pathways of action. Macrophages and neutrophils are key components of the innate immune system in the innate immune system. As part of the innate immune system, these cells can have potent tumoricidal activities. Cells of the innate immune system can kill tumour cells in part by stimulating antibody-dependent cellular cytotoxicity, complement-mediated cytotoxicity, antibody-dependent cellular phagocytosis and the generation of reactive oxygen species. Chemokines produced by tumour cells also play a role in the recruitment of the innate immune cells. However, the role of neutrophils in tumour oncolysis is still being explored. The neutrophil's primary mechanism of tumour killing involves the release
