There's a good in-app help, apparently with some of the complicated UI, and you can also get help from Support if you're not sure how to use an option. Even the UI is as close to the desktop version of Photoshop as possible, so you won't need to use a mouse. A special thanks also goes out to the Gamma Adjustment app which is also included in this release of Photoshop. However, there are apparently limits to the accuracy of this app, and as you toggle between sRGB and Web Safe palette modes it can appear to be off by a few highlights. It's never off by many stops though, so it's manageable.

Louisiana Hall The Louisiana Hall was a historic commercial building located at 609 North Center Street in La Grange, Illinois. Built in 1874, the Louisiana Hall was La Grange's first brick building and the only commercial building constructed in the community until 1883. It was also the city's largest building in terms of floor space. It was designed by Chicago architect Robert H. Wentworth, and was built by George B. Newman. The brick building, which measured by and was topped by a mansard roof, had an integral office on the first floor and a retailing space on the second. The building's iron frame was clad in brick, and the entrance was a recessed porch located on the front façade. It featured an unusual white scrolled frieze and a cupola at the roof line. The building was part of the Historic La Grange Register and the city of La Grange's "Supercenter" district, which had been designated a landmark. Ownership of the Louisiana Hall was acquired by Joseph H. Bogart in 1917. Bogart was a life-long La Grange resident that retired from the lumber industry. He redeveloped the building in 1917, when he had the building divided into two storefronts and rented it to implement his vision of Chicago architecture. Shortly after being developed, the retail building was renamed to the Louisiana Building. It survived with little alteration for over 40 years before it was demolished in 1957. The building was added to the National Register of Historic Places on November 10, 1990. One of the best things about Lightroom is the ability to edit your photos instantly. This software also lets you apply various adjustments to photos like changing contrast, adjusting brightness and color, and much more. But you have to download that data to your computer and then you can edit it. Learn how to edit your photos, right from the camera. The brand new Camera RAW Editor is allowing photographers to make quick and simple adjustments to raw images. With a good understanding of color, organization and exposure you can easily edit the data inside a RAW file's header. Whether you are an amateur or professional photographer, Camera RAW aims to bring out the best in your images by fixing problems that are generally hard to see in other shooting modes. The big changes in the new Camera RAW Editor, include; an easy-to-use interface, an advanced histogram, a built-in RAW converter and an auto-message tool that allows the RAW editor to intelligently identify problems in your images. Photoshop Content-Aware and Sharpen features now recognize and correct any issues in your photos before you're done editing. As well as correcting all kinds of lighting and contrast issues, it can also correct small problems such as blurry shots. The Content-Aware Sharpen feature also goes one step further by removing unwanted objects from your images, making them sharp and clean, then give the results a new sliver of the algorithmic magic. If you're a beginner, it's best to begin with the Sharpen feature. If your image needs no further boost, you can use the Content-Aware Sharpen as a final pass on your image.
